It was a donation to me for helping with the cancer research and for my athletics

Congratulations on receiving that donation—it's a meaningful recognition of your contributions to cancer research and athletics. These kinds of gifts often come from campaigns where athletes or supporters tie donations to achievements, like goals scored or miles run, to fund lifesaving research.[1][2]

Common Donation Programs

Athletes frequently partner with organizations like the V Foundation or Alex's Lemonade Stand to channel athletic accomplishments into cancer research funding. For instance, programs such as "Champions for Kids with Cancer" let participants track stats (e.g., points or races) and turn them into donations via pledges from friends and family.[2][1]

Play4TheCure and similar initiatives encourage teams to "play for" loved ones affected by cancer, with 100% of proceeds supporting research grants.[3]

Tax Implications

In the US, donations for your charitable work or athletic efforts may qualify as tax-deductible gifts if properly documented. Keep records like receipts or acknowledgment letters, especially since you're in New York—consult IRS guidelines or a tax pro for specifics on reporting.[4]

⁂

1. https://donate.v.org/campaign/667859/donate
2. https://www.alexslemonade.org/campaign/champions
3. https://www.nfcr.org/play4thecure/

4. https://www.home.pstgm.com/items-2/postgame-teams-up-with-the-v-foundation-for-cancer-research

5. https://www.facebook.com/groups/215155240781012/posts/1194714472825079/

6. https://www.v.org/about-us/our-story/

7. https://www.instagram.com/reel/DDLQKxByWXx/?hl=en

8. https://www.cancer.org/involved/fundraise/determination.html

9. https://www.instagram.com/reel/DR0tOg5gKQF/

10. https://athletesfightingcancer.org